Is China a key partner in Iran's nuclear development?

In 2021, Iran and China signed a 25-year strategic agreement that includes provisions for defense collaboration. While the pact envisions joint ventures in military technology and training, it does not indicate a return to large-scale arms transfers. During this period, China was a key partner in Iran's nuclear development.

Does Iran have a role in China's Foreign Trade in 2024?

Notably, Iran's share in China's total foreign trade in 2024 was a mere 0.02%--a 9% decline from the previous year--while China's total global trade volume grew by 7%, reaching $6.1 trillion globally.

What are China's key interests in a bilateral relationship with Iran?

Expanding defence and security cooperation is also among Iran's core interests in this bilateral relationship. Conversely, China's primary concern vis-à-vis Iran lies in ensuring regional stability and security in West Asia, which is essential for uninterrupted energy supply and maintaining international trade routes.

What are Iran's priorities in relations with China?

From Iran's perspective, the main priorities in its relations with China include reducing dependency on oil revenues, diversifying non-oil exports, attracting foreign investment into critical infrastructure and industries, and circumventing unilateral Western sanctions.
